Pastor Speaks

"... No Covetousness ..."

This last of the ten sayings of Exodus 20 comes as a kind of climatic idealism in man's relationship to God and his fellowman. Say what you may our attitude towards God determes our estimate and treatment of others. So we must not long after or "covet ' our neighbor, his house, his wife, his man or maid servant, his ox his ass nor anything that is the neighoors.

The widest possible meaning now applies to the word "neighbor". People live primarily by two ideals. Either "my will or thy will be done." Either self is the center or Christ is the center His attitude towards others or we live by our own standards.

To keep this command, will do more to solve the world neighborhood problems than anything else we may do. What does it mean to covet? The word itself means "to set the heart on, or "to pant after." Frequently it is associated with lust, but the 7th command is a little more. We can say, then, to covet is to desire or to possess something or someone which belongs to another. Or simply to desire or to act to acquire that which belongs to another. What does it mean to violate this law? It means we want and go after that which belongs to another. The application applies to nations as well as individuals. It to act selfishly, without regard of Job looks upon as "hineous". (Job. 31:9).

Covetousness is the revival of a sin which lies deep in nature. In search to refute this, I discovered that every Biblical source confirms this spirit. Paul in Rom. 7 says of the Law that it confirms sin. To the Jew it revived sin, to the Gentile it awakened the conscience, so that all are guilty.

Covetousness inclucnces and affects every life. It awakens sin in our lives. Naturally it has ill - effects upon society, and upon our relationship to God.

So this law calls a halt to this sin. It recognizes it, and challenges us to avoid its practice. Paul says that to practice covetousness is to become an idolater.

These ten sayings indicate they are more than civil laws. They are spiritual at the very core. Every serious look at Sinai ought to bring us to Calvary and Olivet. For its through the living Christ that we find the answer to covetousness and all the other laws of God. This last commandment is the last link in God's circle expressed at Sinai. ". . . No other Gods . . ." is climaxed when selfishness and coventousness is ruled out of our lives. This is to be accomplished through Christ.

It is my prayer that these last ten articles have been of some help. If so, I have been rewarded many times for the little effort. Next week I will write a final article before surrending this "Pastor's Word" to another writer.

Learn To Worship

Lesson for August 9, 1964

For all that was said in this column last week about the close relation between the two religions, that of the Jews and that of the Christians, it still is true that these two religions are different. The present-day Jewish religious life is strikingly like that of Christians; but the early Hebrew faith was to look at it—more like those of their pagan neighbors than like the Jewish or Christian religion today. Nevertheless, even from the ancient pages of Exodus, where first we find detailed directions for the public worship of God, we can learn to worship in Most High.

The ancient Hebrew religion was priestly; that is, the offering of sacrifices and leading in all the forms of worship which were observed in Tabernacle or Temple, were not left to chance. The priesthood took charge and took care that all was done in accordance with what they understood to be God's intention. To us today this suggests that God is not rightly worshiped with offhand, irreverent or stupid and silly performances. Religious meetings may go in for bizarre and weird practices such as snake-handling and human sacrifice, crawling on the ground all the way to some sacred shrine, or lying on a bed of spikes; but not the Jews, and not the Christians.

Beauty In Religion

Any one with a little imagination, reading carefully those chapters in Exodus which tell of the construction of the Tabernacle, may be confused by details (and sometimes confused by the lack of them); but one thing stands out: the Tabernacle was a thing of rare beauty. It it had been preserved, as were the treasures of King Tutankhamen, who lived about that time, it would have been praised even today as unique and beautiful in a high degree. So today there is (or there should be a close combining of beauty with the public worship of God. Shabby ways of worship may befit a shabby god, but not the True God, who made everything beautiful in its time.

The Heart In Worship

A boy who joins the army soon finds out that he can no longer do as he pleases, if he ever did. He has few decisions to make. But there is one thing the army gives men a chance to do but will not force on him: namely, to go to church. The army authorities may not be moved as experts in religion but they do know this much: compulsory religion does no one any good. So it was in ancient Sinai and Palestine; gifts to the Tabernacle and Temple were not forced, but were people gave whose hearts moved them to give. So it is to this day. The humblest and simplest worship services in the poorest kind of church building will have as one of the worship, the offering. (Not "collection," please!—there's quite a difference.) So with all parts of the service. Freedom, including free generosity, has been a part of the worship of God ever since Sinai, and inside long before.

The Glory

It is said that the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle, full of smoke by day, of fire by night. Was this a kind of fire as you might have captured on color film? Was it perhaps a figurative way of speaking of what is unspeakable the glory of the invisible God which we cannot see? However it was, it is the glory of God alone which is moral. There can be a great deal of the glory of man in worship; members may boast of the great paid choir and organist; they spend much on the architect sequence, and show you with pride the spacious modern kitchens; but it is not the glory of man that blesses a church, it is the glory of God.
